Performance Compared to Target Performance Range

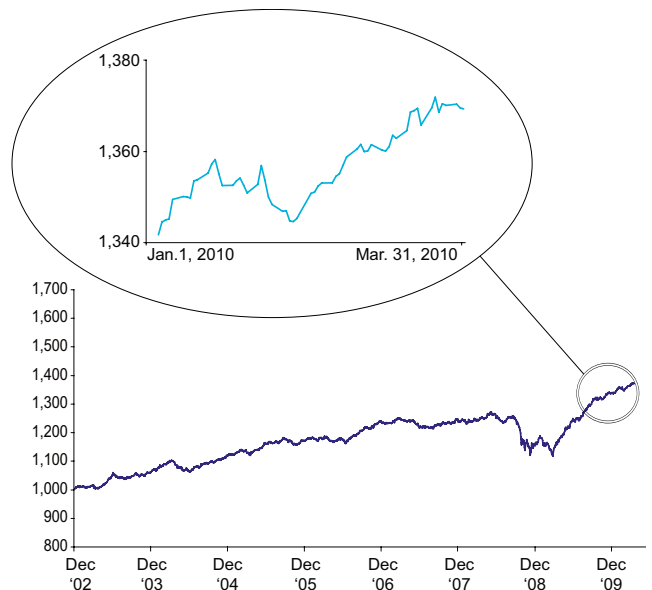

The potential return range and long-term target performance illustrate the effect of holding a diversified investment portfolio mixing various asset classes and are not specific estimates or a guarantee of performance. They are based on historical performance of market indices for each asset class and forward projections of economic trends using a 95% probability factor.

- potential range of return for the time horizon
- long term target performance of the specific mix of asset classes in the portfolio
- return of the portfolio, net of fees, for the associated time frame
- the return of the portfolio, net of fees, since inception
