RETURNS AND INTRA-YEAR DECLINES

This graph shows the annual returns and intra-year declines for the ATBIS US Equity Pool Series O as of December 31, 2022. The intra-year declines represent the largest peak to trough (market high to market low) decline the pool experienced during the year. The chart shows the historical volatility the fund incurred each year along with the year-end return. The main visual being that while volatility is normal, annual fund returns will typically be less drastic, rewarding the patient investor.

Equity markets also saw weakness in the face of aggressive central bank policy and uncertainty from the invasion of Ukraine, and China's COVID-19 policies. European stocks in particular underperformed as soaring energy costs added to the uncertainty caused by the war. Making matters worse for investors was market reaction to economic news. What was once perceived as good news resulted in markets falling, whereas poor economic news was seen as a positive for markets—all due to the anticipated reaction from central banks. For example, following the release of strong or positive economic data, the expectation is that central banks looking to curb inflation through slower economic growth would react by restricting monetary policy further, heightening the chance of overtightening, and likely prolonging any eventual slowdown. Overall though, tempering inflation giving the possibility of slowing rate hikes in 2023 was enough reason to see global equity markets rally significantly through the last quarter of 2022.
